	Bill Gibbons, CEO of H.O.S.T.S. (Helping One Student to Succeed), joined Jim on today's program. He stated that urban education is struggling today due to the increasing alcohol and drug abuse, and the teen pregnancy and drop-out rate. Many urban area children go to school seeking refuge from a sad or violent family situation. H.O.S.T.S. provides a one-on-one quality relationship with the student keeping him pressing on in school in spite of his unfortunate circumstances. Gibbons encouraged parents to listen to their kids and for viewers to get involved in the school system offering support.

	Kurt Billings, New Age expert, shared with host, Jim McClellan, the concept of "Education 2000". He said that "Education 2000" was a new age based curriculum designed for global education. Through the teacher's instruction, students are led to call on "imaginary friends" or spirit guides. Billings stated that this practice can eventually lead to demon possession, automatic writing and other occultic involvement. Viewers were encouraged to know the truth of the Gospel and discern deception. Parents were advised to stay informed of possible new age style teaching.

	Samuel Blumenfeld, author of six books on education, spoke of the problems within the public school system. Besides the absence of moral and spiritual instruction, there is a growing question about the effectiveness of new teaching methods. Children once taught how to read phonetically, are presently taught through pictures and sound. This method has proved unsatisfactory. Blumenfeld strongly advocates private schools and homeschools as a healthy alternative.

Jim McClellan, host, welcomed guest, Katy Lynch, Northwest Regional Advisor of LOVE, Inc., who spoke of the rising cost of living in the Northwest. She related that former "middle class" folks are now dropping down to "low income" because of the current timber industry cut back. The cost of housing and housing expenses, (almost 60% of one's income), are also factors in our struggling economy. LOVE, Inc. provides resources and skills to help people in need of financial assistance. She said that a partnership with churches would offer a support system and a means for resources.

John R. King, editor of "Future Economic Trends" and author of "Chaos in America" was Jim McClellan's guest today. He stated that the Federal deficit is a problem, but not "the" problem. The real problem is $10 to $20 trillion dollar debts of private and corporate sectors and their compound interest, which weakens and slows down our economy. He said the solution is to stay liquid - stop using credit cards, get out of debt, and be self-sufficient and self-reliant.

CRIME (cont)	welcomed by hosts, Henry and Esther Greenidge. Phillips related how she had organized CWAC in the early 1980s because she was very disturbed by the crime, violence, and drug activities occurring in her community. She said that many of the crimes are related to youth gangs and that gang kids need to know someone cares about them and that there is hope for their lives. Her program stresses the importance of learning obedience and respect for those in authority in order for kids lives to turn from crime.

	Jim McClellan interviewed Sgt. Mel Hedgpeth, Manager of the Safety Action Team from Multnomah County Sherrif's office. The Safety Action Team is a group of community service officers and deputies who work together to solve community problems. The team is active in finding help for the homeless, jobs for the unemployed and activities for the youth. He said that it is a community policing effort and recommended businesses and religious communities get involved. Hedgpeth said SAT can be duplicated in any city with some organization and a few committed people. The key is to be available and love people.

CRIME (cont)	Jim's guest today was Lisa Horne, Coordinator of the Neighborhood Crime Prevention Program. She stated that there is more biased crime targeted at specific persons of race, and more gang related crime, even in the suburban and rural areas, than ever before. She explained how the Citizen Foot Patrol is a community patrol effort using walkie-talkies and mobile phones to report suspicious activities. The Neighborhood Watch Program is a community effort with people being trained to patrol areas and report crimes to their local police.

	Jim McClellan interviewed Jeff Kushner, Director of the Office for Drug and Alcohol Abuse, Dept. of Human Resources. Kushner explained that drug and alcohol abuse is costing each tax payer in Oregon over $400.00 per year. With 50 to 60% of the population drinking alcohol, only 11% are heavy drinkers. He related that the drug/alcohol use among teens is actually in decline due to the educational programs instituted in the schools and the campaigns via TV and radio. He urged parents to continue to educate themselves as well as their children on the issues of drug and alcohol abuse.

	Ginger Tobin, substance abuse counselor for Option Recovery Center, discussed the problems of alcohol with hosts, David and Holly Hummel. Ginger stated that 1 out of 10 people are alcoholic while 2 others may not have crossed over the line but have problems with alcohol. The "invisible" line is crossed rather gradually with increased tolerance and loss of control. She stressed the importance of helping the individual believe that he or she is not a bad person because they're alcoholic, but in need of professional help.

Jim Cottrell and Teen Challenge member, Jim Bunch, shared their testimonies of drug abuse and recovery. Cottrell stated that 50% of the drug traffic in the United States is consumed by 6% of the population. He explained that drug and alcohol problems are often caused from a lack of discipline from parents, peer pressure and poor family values. Teen Challenge has an 86% success rate, even after five years after they have left the program. Cottrell attributes this success to the high accountability, structured environment, and daily planting of the Word in the addicts life.

	Donald Whittle, President of Hewitt Educational Resources, explained that Oregon and Washington have higher academic scores than the rest of the nation, but not as high as they could be. Problems in education exist because of the style and standard of teaching which does not allow for a child's unique talents and individuality. Often children start formal education too early, which can cause a child to dislike learning. Whittle offered homeschooling as a positive alternative to the concerns of public education, because parents can educate their children as they see fit.					4-29-93	2:30a

	Kevin Concannon, Director of Oregon Dept. of Human Resources, discussed with Jim McClellan, the state's current implementation of a project that will increase the number of kids graduating from school. At the present time, getting kids to complete high school is first priority. Concannon said that in the U.S. 20-25% of the kids entering high school do not graduate. This is due to the escalating use of alcohol and drugs, teen parenthood, and drop-outs. The state is teaming up with schools to assist families toward self-sufficiency by bringing needed services to the site of the school as well as volunteer support-givers. To parents, Concannon stressed that there is no substitute for having someone who really cares about you.					5-06-93	2:30a

	Craig and Faith Rhyne, creators of "Monthly Money", spoke of the important principles of teaching kids how to manage money. Problems arise when parents want to give kids things they did not have themselves. They advised parents to allow kids to suffer their own consequences and learn from their own mistakes. Training kids early in good, sound money management prepares them for "life after mom and dad".

	Jim McClellan, host, and Dennis Tuuri, Executive Director of Parents Education Association, discussed the problems of public education and the benefits of homeschooling. Tuuri stated that the school system today does not allow parents to educate their own children and the level of bureaucracy in school is very high. He advised people to get involved with traditional value groups that are aggressive and politically active, move control of school system from state level to county level (less bureaucratic control), get involved with the school system and voice your opinions to your representative.

	President of Beaverton's American Family Association, Jim Hill, told Jim McClellan that out of 15 countries the U.S. rates 13th in science and 14th in mathematics. These statistics tell us that there is a decline in the academic level of education in the United States. This is due to the "whole-person" focus and "out-come" based education which ultimately lowers standards. The American Federation of Teachers and National Teachers Association are trying to make teachers the ultimate judge of what should be taught in schools, with no room for parental input. He urged parents to develop positive relationships between school, home, and
